CITY COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT. Last of the February Exercises of This Kind Gen. Webb's Death.

The midyear commencement of the February class of 1911 of the College of the City of New York was held yesterday in the great hall of the St. Nicholas Heights institution. Ninety students received bachelors' degrees in what will probably be the last midyear commencement of the college. Yesterday's class is the second to have a midyear graduation, the experiment of February commencements having been started last year. It is known that considerable objection was made against continuing the plan this year, and it was with reluctance that the board of trustees gave
